

À

J

JÀNote: If we lead off w/ this c, then Red sd say somethng at our last look at him which hooks back.

rem it's gonna take grunt work

2

May 7, 1945 V.E. Day

Á

surreal images off the bat and throughout

0

9

Through one of those horizontal spring days full of waves
of pink and white petals and their sudden perfumes óalong with whirling paper and grit.
I ran through the sweet odors; once in what seemed an endless cloud of creamyUhÜpetals I halted to unwrap newspapers from my legs. Another time a tiny glass needle shot into my cheek at the precise moment the flying day darkened temporairily toñight.
I resumed running in that darkness, towards a trolley car I wanted to catch which the sunlight was ap ng over, rendering it a buttery toy at the end of my vision. I slowed my steps when I saw it was just standing there, the motorman doing something to the cable thaô held the trolley mechanism to the overhead wire.

In a second a newspaper was blown into him, surrou4pd his head as he flashd out at it with a butcher knife. I saw then, splaying out in the racing sunlight, the fra yed ends of a few strands of that cable. He went back to his sabotage, reflections of the knife skipping across the milky blue of the nearby tavern window. When I got closer I could see the window had been pushed in, was resting against a barstool a foot or so inside the tavern. There were large brown pieces of glass from whiskey bottles on the pavement along with a jigsaw assortment of other pieces, and through all of this a small man with a soaking-wet apron down to his slioctops itself was walking a strLAw broon) right as sun,as the motorman was still hacking ferociously away at the trolley cable.

And when I *rri-4edly hopping into light, he had joined the bartender on the sidewalk and was trying to wrestle the broom from him. At first it seeMed an earnest struggle bAt they were hooting and laughing;

ÜhÜŒ24

finally they let it skitter off, soon toasting each other with fifths of whiskey, both laughing again as the motomarlpunched at the swirling dirt and paper with the hand holding the bottle, then licked the hand to capture the whiskey that had been sloshed, the Vawness of which thrust up my nostrils as I ran past them, jumping over the broom and barely keeping my balance on the slippery glassxwith the bartender offering his bottle and doing his own shuffling pantomime.

As patches of corm yellow and bruise-colored light waved over us I rushed on to intercept another trolley line curving in three blor-ks further. Their laughter followed me upon the wind but I wondered if they were la4ighing at me or at a bum who was running back and forth inside the trolley car, the removable control handle in his blackened hand.,and making what he conceived to be trolley noises,

I ran harder to outrace that laughter, past workmen and their wives sitting on porches and listening ot the radio, usually big consoles with round dials hauled out from living rooms for the occasion. I thought then that the rooted, stolid couples looked like photographs in Life Magazine.

They strained to catch the source of that laughter chasing me but it was washed out by shrieking cacaphony growing towards us from the trolley I hoped to catch.
I jumped off the curb to run between the tracks, thinking to beatÜhÜwhat I could see now was an open trolley to the convergence point; then I could run directly ahead of it to the stop. I was at the point of giving up because of it crisp pace but when it reached the curve leading onto my track it had to slow drastically, almost tipping, the people inside rushing to the high side with a cry of whoa. The car was headed YALE BOWL, the only line still to have r?
open trolleys, but it was ikegtd downtown of course, so these roisters could bring their celebration to the one which reached me as a sort of

25

0
faraway rustle punctuated by horns and whistles.
I was at the trolley stop, panting, watching that car lean excruciatingly back to vertical and pick up speed. For some reason É,,!B,,!B,,!Bar white flat-sided Ein bottle wedged into the scrawny network of a privet hedge beside me. I must extract it before the trolley stops. A contest. But when I looked up the trolley was ;Surprisingly large and picking up more speed.) and I waved my arms for it to stop, the gin bottleÜhÜstill in my white hand, its reflections dancing everywhere. But the trolley was passing, jammed with workmen in their brown and gray clothes.
Throw it~ someone screamed. Leôs see your amé ÜÜLeôs éee your cockill added a woman who was leaning towards me, barely three feet away as the
trolley again tipped, her face like a balloon full of blood.

meini leaned out to pull her back, their hands swaming her enormous breasts. A sleepy-looking man had a gash on his forehead, and even as the trolley rushed by, dirt floated into that brownish-looking cut and glowed like mica. A black cloud clamped down, making the rest of the faces blue-black rubber as they snapped by. I flung the bottle and it fell short of the rear skirts, spraying up a shower of muddy looking glass.

I jammed my eyes shut and inhaled the burning electrical smell which heavy hung in the air, the iron smell of wheel grinding rail too. I opened them to see tiny blue sparks flying from the overhead trolley, large gold ones drifting up from the wheels. The yellowish rear growing smaller and smaller, absorbed into a sullen blackness.

Once again the light is full and brilliant, and just as suddenly another trolley waits at the curb, its door open, the driver patiently studying the track ahead. I jump on, still panting and, I suppose, wide-eyed at seeing a large freckled hand over the coinbox. I look up into a freckled face topped by gray hair fringed dull red. Company treatówhether they know it or not~ he announced, swinging the handle to his left which closed the doors. Then he quietly asked me~How many wars end on my run? At least the European section thereof; 140 spun the power handle and we lur off, the rails squealing. And though his eyes were stony his voice took on the enthusiasm of a master of ceremonies, stopping me as I was walking to the rear. Would you inquire after the wily Jap? Come on back here and sit beside me. Éar white flat-sided hell. Anyways, we aÉready got him 6eat inthe movies. Movies are a great invention. Why with his big teeth and bad breath and atrocities!fl He gave a small, almost coquettish wave as I sat behind him. ,Shitlff I shifted on the s, Ivan? nagging rattan seat. Shall we talk about the Bear; in his window; His eyes took o he dimmest shine/ one whole neighborhood flew by, several wide-open mouths at trolley stops. Why not speak of him now before iôs too late; I was moving towards the aisle and away from the middle portion of my seat which had been freshly slashed. I repeatæ!æace twisted around over his right shoulder to study me, wrinkling his freckled forehead. Shall we discuss the Russians; He looked back to the street. Okay with me longsç I get downtown.¹¹ I could recognize, of course, one of these adults who taught, usually sarcastically. I studied his back, the threadbare uniform coat. Hell. Anyways, we amy head around like Charlie McCarthy all the way downtown, whatsay you move over here next to the door. My head around like ¹¹ But its my problem to which I refer.¹¹ There was a window to his left held up by a strap. He snapped it free an he window chattered down, a hot wind amplifying his thin red hair. I lock the speed up at its fastest.
ÜhÜŒ26

27

Like so. Then ... ¹¹ He removed the power handle, revolved it over his head like a baseball pitcher warming up. I throw it out this window unless ... to I moved. He put the handle back on, chuckling, knocked the speed down two notches. You're a genuine hero, kid. Just saved whole bunch of lives, no shit. Well we get downtown: waves and waves of people. You look scared. Never ridden with a madman before?¹¹ All the time. ¹¹ The two and three story houses, the red-up grocery stores were clicking by with a pleasant regularity. All the time Hey you're all right. You see humor in prevailing tragedy.¹¹ I was emboldened. It suppose to be celebration, not tragedy. We ^{b(} at the Germans didn't we? Yah yah yah went form laughing to choking and spitting, hunched and smaller over the control box, his face scarlet, the outline of a shoulder pad on his black uniform coat showing up a dirty silvery color. Asthma croaked, ^{from} my youth. Get rid of your youth fast as you can. This shit is what kept me out of Spain.¹¹ I knew nothing about SpainA of the Russians that they were our allies, that we had met them a week or so ago on a smoking pile of rubble in a destroyed German city, embraced them, showed off our flashy wristwatches, sold some. He still fought for breath. Hell ... maybe I will ... get to Russia. Cause ^{wå43!} them näxt. What the hell! Lifå them n^o? For same reason he knocked down our speed another notch and we were inching past the Winchester Repeating Arms Plant which looked abandoned. He turned to me, grimy images of bricks moving É11 []But iis my probled gray eyes. What Ée said made the skin on the back of my hands prickle but he had merely seen the same newpaper picture. Just cruse we sold them watches and they kissed us Slavik style and held oq+ heroic Stalingrad doít mean we woít fight them, little fellow. Why jimineee, jimmy-fuckin-nee, sentimentality is the art of the ruling class. You suck in the sugar while they shove it up your ass. Hey Éed gray eyes. What l me something, uh..É Say, what the helour name;Skipper- I bit off, not liking being c 4)led little fellow.Well Skipper, yoõre gonna get educated today cause theùre screwing in the streets downtownthat is when theùre not[]hing windows and throwing bottles. Land of the brave.11 And he flung the power handle forward and soon we were speeding through another neighborhood, whipping past small groups at the trolley stops, some of them waving their fists, passing undershirted workmen and their wives on porches, their waving at us andÜiÜlaughing at those we were leaving behind.Andi: Red. Red the red, aint that clever; After a moment he giggled and the we were riding with the door open and I could hear the rising din from downtown, but he snapped it Shut wheoever we came to a trolley stop. Just us, Skipper. Just usl Fuck everybody else, aint that right ;I guess. I must have shown my concern for those who misjudged his speed and tried to cross the tracks, especially a couple of older women with shopping bags. Goddamn I just miss and miss and miss. Just doít have the killer instinct. Él me something, uh..ot the Yankees.11 []CoÉld you maybe go slower again;Tell me some ng, Skipper. Ho÷d you discover that word? Thaôs a good fuckin word, maybe. What may be. You stick with that word.

28

Not should be but may be. Cause nothing ever happens but that the big boys grind your balls off but you keep thinking maybe. Cause thaôs hope and therå; For s and soåyou might as well hope. Ydu do it for me, okay;

Brown paper bags covered with grease spots flew out from under the seats and bottlearolled down the aisle as our express trolley rushed on. Red took out a nearly full bottle of Southern Gentleman from under his seat, upended it, his red hair fallingÜhÜthinly back, the caramel-colored liquid gurgling. Some kids were placing pennies on the rails in front of us. When I turned to see them out the rear windowjpicking up the flattened pennies, Red burped and wheezed.

I looked back to him e was tossing the bottle past me and out the opened door to shatter among the carpet of glass already there. Crystal day¬ he portentiously announced. I shrugged. Never mind, Skipper, you just keep your eyes peeled once we get downtown cause iôs whores or jellybeanótake your choice. One dame is blowing all comers in honor of her husbanäNseävice with Patton.11]Yeah sure.11

His red-gray eyebrows lifted. You doít believe me. Éot the Yankees.11]]Colieve me neither. BÉt thaôs all right. Élieve me neither. Byself to go fuck mysÉlf ariyway.11 I laughed and he pounded on his control box likke a druer in the movies, going so fast that the freckles seemed to run together on his hands. The door stayed open and open-mouthed people flung by. Stay away fro+he kind of people yoöll meet downtown¬ says my mother, combing my hair among the silhouefts of enemy planes and ships lining the walls of my room. But I wanted to see everything I could of course.

sex was a disc-like thing in my house, thin and wobbling but nonetheless emittting signals I could sense even in the middle class tableau of my father reading the paper while my mother darned socks. It wasît the speeding electricity that was coming at me now, but some crushed and straining entity the release of which wnuld evidently destroy ever7thing.

ÜhÜŒ30

We had reached the downtown district and he had to slow the trolley and close the door since a coke bottle had come whistling

in jvst missing Reäseheäd and crashing through the small window he had threatened to throw the control handle through ten minutes previously. In a few minutes we hardly moved: the combined weight of the swams pressing against the trolley from both sides made the wheels slip and jerk, and I held onto that ripped seat as if it were a sled. Finally the crowd in front parted and we picked up to about wad king speed, hundreds of faces melting by the door. Red the Reähewhät the brilliant intellectuals down at the

carbarn call me. That and rebel, hillbilly, cracker.
Wilmington, Delaware Éyself to go fuck mys11 A grimy s.,a%Lor Éad pressed his face against the glass of the door and was trotting alongside. Theùre like these propaganda-fed cretins- Red spat, coaxing enough speed from the trolley to make the sailor slide away, wall-eyed against the rubhing life of the street.Yoõd better take it easy- I whispered and he inexplicably brought the car to a stop, and just as inexplicably the crowd flowed away and it grew almost silent in the trolley car, the outside noise sounding like a kind of sunny buzzing until a cloud of smoke drifted past, bits of white paper whirlpooling inside.Tell me something, Skipper ... 11 He had turned and I could see his full face, the gray eyes sunken and immensely weary. you ever hear of a Carthaginian victory?Was it ag st Rommel?- His laugh proved quiet and tired, and made me feelÜjÜstronger.

s just where you give up too much. Doít worry about it.
I taught you something. And now wå and so Crystaå Night and you never heard of that neither.11 I shrugged, told him I should get off.Stay the way you are ... people take locker next to yours. And keep your eyes open cause yoõre in pit now, tucking all over the place as I said, and even up the ass. Fights everywhere.

31

Bottles coming from every point of the capitalistic compass.
Winning is losing but money never lost a war. Promise me yoõll never forget that. É11 A grimy s.,a%Lor do.11 I diääand I haÉeîôbut then I started to reach over his body to get at the door handle because he was muttering[]Red save world
with Wilson. Red save Spain. Read all about it. knerican

Facists win war. Treason prospers.¹¹ He suddenly became ghtened and sat erect, flipped the tiny handle near the bottom of the coin box and scooped out a handful of change. He let me open the door so he could throw out the money past me and into the street.

Kids began fighting over it, and Red was suddenly screaming. Children beg in the streets while the peasants dream of steak and beer. The sailor was abruptly there, flocks of dirt and foam around his chapped and purple mouth. I wanted to jump out but was afraid of him. The bosomy woman from the open trolley appeared and he punched her in the breast. ~~c~~issed She swun iidÜhÜE fallini.- into the lake of glass and coins. I leaped over her, feeling the force of Reäwhshäut on my back. Somebodùs gonna kill you, sailor, and I hope iôs meô He slammed the door as the sailor tried to lunge up the stairs. Heil Americareamed Red as the sailor clawed at the door he leaving streaks of blood. I backed slowly away, afraid that the-Naii-or would associate me with Red, who now bellowed. Crystal Might, Kristallnacht! Kristallnacht! Kristallnacht!!! The sailor shook his head and gave up, taking the crowd with him.

When I last looked back at the trolley I was about tweîw feet up the tracks and the two front windows held smoky suns, behind which Reäshfaäe, fiery in forehead and heavily shadowed underneath, looked like a death mask.

32

As I studied him I became aware of heat at my back. A bonfire blazed behind me. It was comprised of furniture, and huge bubbles formed and popped on a headboard, sending up black snakes of smoke. The only thing left in the shattered store window was an immense radio console with a large mirror atop it and a message in soap writing. WILL CONVERT TO TELLE-VISION. Two muscular boys were shoving the whole works over and the mirror flew up in huge shards which they then dueled with, slashing away. Until they were left with stubs in their bleeding hands which they star l at until the sailor came jitterbugging between them, leading a jubilant entourage. I tagged along until I heard a shaking basso voice off to my right. I stopped to see where it came from but the crowd had gone into reverse too and I had ti 0t plant myself in the front row. É do.11 I diäand I hathe Gemans. Ém GermÉn and I hatc the Comansill a fat man emphasized. Behind me I hear tho thud of flesh and snapped around to see blood firing from the sailoòs nostrils, his head jerking back and forth as he sunk. And Éthe Gemans. Ém Germt American Geman no Éerman German. Nois fat man l. a roll of fat across his neck and shoulders, a halo of sweat around his cannon ball head; she, equally as fat and-, in a shapeless colorless housedress, i ai; slapping a paper effigy of teeth and thick glasses made up mostly of orange paper. Slap the Jap- she invites, slap the dirty little Japill No one elmo,t di6s and they seem/a wincing in the anticipation of some heckler. ed

She sh.0Q4; the effigy and the wind caught i it and tur)R/it around, carrying too the sad and desperate smell of their sweat. I closed my eyes expecting some dreadful disgrace to come upon them. The fat man tdok- a swing at the revolving Jap, his neck taut, bellowing Ét American Geman no r cent Americana ThiÉ is the greatest day of my life means it. You should hear him.11 She hod let go of the effigy could and it fÜhpast me and I hear it being kicked behind me.

33

Roosevelt this and Roosevelt that. He even tried to join the army. At his ageich army- somebody sneera4and her eyes lost focus and he raisej his fist but then dro ;4 it to his side as she rushe4 at me, that dress a ther huge sail and/shå Crystand I småll the same desperate smell but mixed with kitchen odors.

As the folds of her dress cover me, I spy, hanging like a Christmas ornament against the smoke, a little girlfin face, glowing whitely, eyes leaping and scintillant. I had seen a face like that in Wegeånd I smn The Nåw York News. lipQOKLYN SCHOOLCHILDREN SEE

GAMBLER MURDERED IN. STREET,,,

Now what you gonna do for me, huh? the fat woman yells at me to get the crowd laughing. The fat man is literally hopping. I need a great big manill she shakes me. The fire rising in my cheeks I get a daydream flash of both of these large apologetic Germans on the glassy pavement, smoke coiling up from hundreds of wounds, their huge bodies being chucked by waves of blood. She had released me, was turning away when her husband squealed, shaking with laughter all the while, ôShe woulda fixed that Hitlerl Broke hislogsillÉr cent Americana Thigs all right! lthe fÉt woman insisted in a voice which becameÜiÜŒ/strangely choked bite .,,d for she saw the contents of the pail of garbage descending on her husband before he did, the coffee grounds and oranges, and grayish-green slime. That little elfin girl-child shrieked in a serious of ascending bursts as a boy in knickers ran away carrying the empty bucket. I kill little bastard; shouted the fat man, a ribbon of gray slime around his bulging, beefy neck, but the woman caught up to him, was soon wiping his face off with her skirt as he knelt. Papa papa papa~ she consoled and all the while her eyes darted around. Break his bandy legslll Papa whispered.

34

A c,

The crowd had completely left them. of the trailers, I would not look at them again, found myself in a procession being led by two men holding the sailor up above their heads. I was jostled by a toothless man wearing an overcoat covered with political campagn buttons, mostly WILKE. They said they was gonna skin him~ he whistled. Be something see man skinned.11 I heard snapping noises which I could not associate with any-thing at all. I shoved very quickly past him is in order to eventually see who these ÜHÜE men were. One was a soldier who was bare-chested but wore a marine officer's hat heavy with braid, the other was a mechanic with a one piece coverall which looked like one immense grease spot. They seemed to want to function as the sailors seconds in a fight, for they were goading him on now as he circled a baker, short and stocky in his starkly white uniform, and pulled at the potholders which hung from the baker's sleeves on elastic bands. The sailor minced around him, snapping a potholder from time to time.

ué- 14(té

Each time one snapped the baker swung and the odor of apples joined the air. Soon the baker was calling the sailor a disgrace to his uniform and the sailor was insisting that the baker was a disgrace to his, to the falling-down hysteria of his mates. The baker removed an orange apron hardly wider than a belt and proceeded to fold it with care, absently knocking away the sailor's hands during the whole process. The soldier was attempting to clear an area of glass by dragging the inside ed of his oo boo*hree or four feet at a sweep. You will not insult my manhood I stated the baker, his sharp blue eyes aimed heavenward to dusk and smoke.

ÜHÜE Yes Dearie- cooed the sailor. The baker I placed his dainty apron r; t U), V

at his feet and then stepped over it into the, leared area. The sailor joined him with studied dignity, arranging his once-white uniform as the widdpicked up and flapped their clothing, making the sailor look like an epileptic and the baker a hunchback.

35

Glaring

at each other, they waited for the wind to die then flew at each other only to be locked into a breathless, shuffling bearhug which ended when they gravitated outside the leared area and fell and broke apart. The baker started up shakily, having acquired blotches oiblood at both knees. To the sailor it seemed to indicate a triumph and he was turning away with his arms high to provoke a cheer when his sneer was crashed inward by an extraordinary blow from the still-rising baker. That elf child shrieked again somewhere and we all were snapping our heads around to see where she was as the sailor sunk down and pitched forward and the baker was recoiling and just able to maintain his balance. These horoes4l he taunted evcn while slipping,□these heroosill

The soldier and mechanic were draggin the sailor away, his knees madking two paths through the glass. The real heroes aint here, am I right; the baker began to plead. Theùre in Gemany or theÜiÜPacific. I would have gone. I would have. I was between wars.

A kid for the first, and now with my own business and a daughter to raise and no wife.¹¹

Someone said not to worry about it, wasît in the cards, he was needed here, but the baker, even while nodding assent, kept muttering,□would have gone, go even now.¹¹ Someone had handed him his little orange apron and he sobbed into it. An old man whose tongue lolled in his mouth patted him on the bac and ribbons of flour undulated, rld- rple inthe dusiryo 1074 light. No wife- the baker asserted flatl I\ é the é d man urinated in a quikly diminishing arc.

The last witness , I ran away but right into a raw-lipped girl of about my own age who fell upon my shoulder crying-Please oh please. Oh Godé

I juméed back but she held on, leaving her feet and ging from my neck like a rag doll. That soldier- she was gasping,□he tried to put,his hand under my dress. one of the things started the fight.

Égs all right! lthe fell Éve gotta get hoÉe. I ... 11ÜhÜBut she held on, her words wet on my shoulder. If if if I cait be with you Éell Éve gotta get hond woít be able to sÉop. I cait help it. Nobody ever tried to do that before. Put his hand... Håñ The Nhrust här away enough so that I could see her pulsing face, wild and spiking hair, but couldít loosen her grip on her neck. I doít wELnna hear about it. It aint MY business.11

Three older girls ran by, arm in am. , ,7ive her a kiss-they sang.

The bakes voice drifted in as lagot one of.,,her hands loose.

OñWhereld

she go, my Belle;

She turned her face out from my shoulder to scream oh shut up, Daddywas gasping by now but had both her hands gripped. Get him...

take you home.11You kidding; She jerked her hands free, still facing me, and rubbed her wrists, then licked each one slowly.

I

A

J

JÀhad to watch. He doít care. He just wanted his fight is all.11 In poked a grandmother in a silky polka dot dress. Take her home, Sonny. She should be seeing these disgusting shows at her age. She had underlined disgusting shows as if it were my fault.I doít know anything about it. Leave me alone- I protested but she left shaking her head, a tiny white pillbox of a hat round. Iôs no wonder you doít have mannersill she hissed. The girand was on my elbow but I shook it off; then she had my hand, pulling, and ran off dragging me. Her running was eccentric and giddy and she tripped me more than once. Let me goyelled, ÜjÜembarrassed by being handled so easily by a girl, but I started giggling along with her after a bit.

Old grandma didít miss

Look at them kids! Theùre drunkill

The dark wind lifted her, billowing her polka dotted ski r and v rned her sideways. Through the crook of her elbow I could see in miniature the lady from the open trolley kissing the distracted baker, her tongue far far extended and glistening purple through the smoke and dusk. Look at all of that- her words joined the rushing wind as we ran on. Areít they stupid? And wårurst hbe the åhildren.¹¹ At that point I continued saying nothing, musing even in our acrid flight that I had never held a female hand this tightly. I let go with Hcy I really gotta get home. My mother..uh uhd she was behind me, pushing. I have to thank you in a minute.¹¹

Jesus thought I.

She eventually pushed måbe the resistång-through the jagged arch left by the impartial shattering of the bakery window, spears of glass glistening with the glowing purple light of that early evening. She dusted off a danish against her blouse, blew on it, handed it to me., gi%m motioned for me to follow her)and I thought I understood her strength when she looked pretty much likea boy from the rear. When we got to the workroom iî4he-i-ear she pulled a long piece of white wrapping paper off a roll, ripping it off slowly on the stationary knife which was part of the fixtureÜhÜwhich held it. She placejthe paper on a table and tried to lift me up to it.

by my own power. Then, among the barrels of flour danish from me and broke off infinitesimal pieces, pinching tiny piece and putting it into my mouth. She was liking me

-Xmvossible of course so I got up on the table she took the off each tiny with her coarse silently whispering lips and closed eyes and nondescript brown hair.

The girls in school had very very many reservations about me.

○Why do you want to trdat me like a baby; I doít know.¹⁰ Her eyes4still closed.

Well Énd woít be able to ss all right. it,s juÉt...nobody else was my age. Out there. Iôs just that I thought if I could find somebody my age it it it... wouldít be so crazy. And so ... cruel.11I doít know about that. And I think should get ... before your fatherHim? Hå resistalways årunk. It probablyYeah well you mother will ...□ The lids of the barrels glowed

I

like corposants in that darkening room.
Didít you hear him; The inside of her mouth was glowing too.
□HisÜjÜlovely Belle; And then she fed me in rhythm:□Ding...dong...Belle.
Gone ... gone ... gonelf, Yeah, well me too.1, You haveít finished your danish.1, Yeah well I never will at this rate.11 Something caught in my voice and her whole face and tom boùs body softened. And in a way which lifted

I
awaY the outside buzzing she whispered. That soldier could come back.11És all right. it,s ju1 And I believed it Éven as I was surprised sayingit.

Her head so slowly shaking. ll]:t Seared mc to death. To death.to□Yeah. Well. I could see that. I mean I didít really see anything. I mean what you said. I mean I didít see him do it. You told me about it but i ... e,Thaôs too bad- she teased, and i felt the fire jolt my cheekbones. The danish was gone and she was Playfully slapping my hands while singining in a whisper,□Blushing boy, blushing boy, whaôs he blushing for;

39

Soon my hands joined this slapping game and after a while there we were face to face and staring, our hands carrying on almost by themselves.

And I waa the kid led to the house of sweets who was alreadyÜjÜfull, who had a day explode in his brain before the insinuating silliness

we both half-played at her with hands still dreamily moving, staring
, l-i c at me with her green marbles of eyes, a few dark brown hairs vibrating against the floury windows dusk-glowing.

Into our small breathing comes the sound of showers of glass, and an almost monotone squealing. Iôs awful about them~ she whispers, holding my hands from moving, how they act.11Hey that stuff costs money. A lot of people go crazy. They go crazy! They they they they go absolutely crazy; I find myself shouting and she, frightened, wide-eyed, cases back against the flour barrels.
Btrt Amot by the time I become aware of my own yelling, she suddenly brightens, swingspast me to the roll of papeòwhen our bodies touch that 3 4 instant, she bites the inside of her lip.
Soon she is wrapping me round and round with white paper and slapping wet and glue-smelling manila tape variously. Okay now~ she injects into my own giggles. Yoõre ready for a customer to take home.

And I feel

ÜhÜŒ

Is that right; Iôs the same thin sarcasm I had used with Red. Not really~ she answers quizzically. Cream puff. É1 And I believed it ng. Ever7thing. ÉmÉeven scared of you right now. Sooooooo, maybe Éng. Ever7thing. Émt the same time@[]WhaÉ am I; Singing from the dark and rustling inside.

Big eclair filled with lots of custard mmmmmmmmmmmmill the moisture as she licks the paper over my cheek.

I pull away asking~And how about you? Whaõre you;
Big cake I am. Rich and bad. Deviood.11 40

You should grow up~ I assert. You really caít be two things at the same time.11 But she doesít listen, poking her fingers in through the white paper, letting in blue speeding light as she tastes each one. Mmmmmmmml This is a wonderful eclair.of I eventually seize one finger and pull it in along with her hand, and by dint of a sawing motion with our hands manage to rip through all of the paper. I am growling through this process and she is whimpering. I think that we sgv)that it aa a game where we mock everything, especially our awkwardness and fear. Et the same time@ Whaaper, announcing, of course, that iôs my turn, soon wrapping her up, both of us giggling I become almost too eerily weak to complete the job. She gets quite still when Eaper, announcing, ofce.

5 @e, @ rea Å5, Éill you tÜkÜme home; A*cr greer cycs k-d c KWith DL mother and father?lt Iôs like giving yourself immediately discouraging news, though I snap out of it to apply the tape in vertical strips on her small breasts with her breathing rustling the paper madly. You freshd shåalways uch a fåt inside there that I rip, the whole business off her only to have her chase me into her bedroom and loc he door. She is whooping hysterically on the other side as I have to look at the sacred heart on the wall and Raggedy Ann on the narrow chenille-spread bed. Should we wait for Daddy; she pipes at some distance away from the door. loudly

And then the only sound is my/pumping heart. My ear against the varnished door I can smell its darkness. I go to the lone window and try to raise it. I can, but just enough to hear the maniacal street where on top of cursing and yelling and scattered pops of bottles being thrown, someone is playing a sour trumpeôas if to cue the streetlights which come on at that moment.

41

Éce.

5 @e, @ rea Å5, something to break Éhe glass but talking at the same time. Holy shiti Whaôre you doing out there? ÅmÅlet me out. my motherô But the glass doorknobf turns slowly, looking like an immense jewel in the pale light from the street.

Then the door is opened and shåuch a fith smål pastries, bearing them in her arms and balancing precariously. I can see her eyes back there, ÜjÜfrightened of a misstep. And then iôs revealed to me through an opening that she has taken off the schoolgirl blouse and wears one of the bakes orange aprons for a haber. Shåith sma makingåa quarter turn and falling half onto the bed. I try to grab a pastry but the real idea of this new game she somehow motions) is to eat them from her. I do, my b6 f half on the bed, and when I get close to a baseball sized breast she turns away and tries to slide under but she can't get loose or keep that halter from sliding down. soon the breast is in my mouth, the nipple raspberry smeared and delicious, but she is furiously twisting to get free, the joke having gone bad on her, and É something to break etg4t on her I can. ÉBy now she is crying and Éetg4t on her I can. t bit her so Ém spriÉging up[]Sorry sorry sorry bleeding Jesus looking down and Reggedy Ann smeared with crumb-dotted icing.

Her tears are more like liquid giggles because now she is pointing to my pants, jammed out at the crotch. I try to cover it with both hands.

She pulls the covers up and the rest of the pastries fly everywhere. Her eyes are like reen clouds and seem set back in. ☺Thaôs enougèsèt if you show me yours Ét bit her so Ém sprout we caït do anythiÉg.

Her eyes then motion to let my pants drop and I prance around that room, turning so I could catch the weak outside streetlight so it would be mirrored hugely in the Varnish of the door.

The following minutes burn with their own fire as Éut we caït do anythi

I would agree Éith my mother were dreadful; striding over to that bed and ripping the chenille spread off, her fingers soon to be in my mouth with my sucking the sugar off of them, only stopping when I think-after many sweating excuseÜhÜmds-that É

I would agree he shriek atid sobs Ét my plunges , is ripping away at my face until a finger hooks inside my mouth-a I bite down till I taste blood. She pulls it out and I look my mouth onto hers our tongues dancing in sugar and blood.

She had already sopped up the blood with the little apron and we were playing peek-a-boo when the baker threw a light switch on us and on his own pulpy face. He bellowed, blood firing from his nostrils, and fell upon her, beating her through the covers.

Whore like your motherillHe made me, forced meew up muffled through the covers, and he beat harder. In that brilliant light I was frenetically rolling my clothes into R all. Forcede kept on insisting but her last one broke apart with laughing and she matched the force of her laughing to each blow.

He took a swipe at me as I catapulted by and out of that room, eventually down a cat-smelling hallway and into the /\ back yard, carrening into a pile of empty lard cans which rolled after me. I could hear Irish women gossiping high high above crisscrossed clotheslinesa I was all but snortng flames from my nostril as I ran over mud and glass and rusty cans and dog shit, the air I pushed in front of me feeling like grease. In my nakedness I encountered bnly one other person, a drooling negro girl sittind in a pa+thed inner tube in the middle of a green mud puddle. When I got closer and saw her in the,jight broken into small squares by the latticework under the billboards, I could see that her hair was peppered with gray.ÜHÜŒJ.

C,4vr et

43

As far as I could tell I was a usual sight to her, and I began to wonder even as I excruciatingly ran what my impressionistic nakedness would look like on the street-side of the billboard.

Theqthe retarded girl started slappin4the water frantically and I looked back to see the baker,

a

llelj up

burnt-joking trash barrel, ovei, hixa nd moaningBelle? Belle; He flung the barrel at her but missed by a good five feet, instantly looking dmn at his feet.

I could feel the stinging cuts on my own; it was a relief to periodically land in fresh dogshit.

I ended up under a scruffy bush on the edge of an overgrown softball field. Among garbage and beer bottles and vomit I panted and cried, finally pulling on my clothes, tears plopping down on my shoes as I laced ,bhem.

Past dozens of trolleys abandoned on their tracks I walked home, iRhed really, footsore as I was, stumbling over trash and slipping on

o n I (

of glass. From the streetlights angle I must have looked like a tentative ice skater.ÜiÜŒMy parents were listening to our Philco when I arrived, its orange dial the only thing visible in our living room. The celebration of VE Day was just then beginning in San Francisco, an announcer bragging about strangers kissing. Imagine mother exclaimed, total strangerslllJesus God would I like to be therell, surprisingly burst from my father.

Though the words were meant for me, their edge was targeted for him as she sniffed Take a bath dear.11

But he trumpeted, Take a whorå makingd in thå deathly quiet following.the announcer sped on about some girls making a banner all by themselves but couldt get them to answer any questions in their shyness. Your father, who must think hÅd in thdockss oÅ something, means just fill a basin and wash off.11 She sensed that I wanted to hear more from my father and from the announcer and she flatly hissed,

44

That will be more than sufficient for tonight.11

That day had all but destroyed me and yet I still craved more happening-but my bones sunk down inside 4A* knowing that my father had probably lost his last battle in the world in the vicious genteel.

In my dark room I took my whorådockss ong rounåhouse punches at an imaginaryÜhÜbaker, who begged for mercy, falling to his knees and out of my sight as I tried to stop my face in myslhaking mirror, surrounded by reflections of the velvety silouettes of planes and ships.